Look Before You Lock

Labor Day is around the corner; back-to-school shopping might be done; and it feels like summer is drawing to a close. However, as long as temperatures stay warm—even 60 degrees—children will still be at risk of heatstroke in cars. Do not forget to look before you lock as we move toward fall to keep the children in your life safe.

For resources and tools related to the “Look Before You Lock” campaign, you can visit the Administration for Children and Families’ Early Childhood Development site. Our tip sheet is now available in both English and Spanish. You can also visit the U.S. Department of Transportation \(DOT\) page on heatstroke to learn more, or you can go to the DOT resource page for materials.

Stay safe this September!

The overall picture displays a car that is located outside, with the sun hidden behind a large cloud above and behind the car. Even when it’s not sunny. Where’s baby? (A picture of a car in the direct sunlight is located above those two words.) Look before you lock. The logo for the Juvenile Products Manufacturing Association followed by the organization name.
